Abstract: Increase and gaps in the knowledge about the biota of lichens and lichenicolous fungi in Turkey in the last 4 years are documented, including some supplements. Since the compilations by JOHN & TÜRK (2017) and JOHN et al. (2020) 32 species of lichens and 17 lichenicolous fungi were newly published for Turkey. A total of 689 additional species (59 lichenicolous and 636 lichenized) are new for one or more provinces. Lecanora albula, Placynthium flabellosum, Ramalina bourgaeana, R. elegans and R. tortuosa are specified here as new for Turkey and 134 species (2 lichenicolous and 132 lichenized) as new for provinces. 31 publications were evaluated. The knowledge has improved in 40 provinces.

Zusammenfassung: Ergänzungen zu Checkliste und Bibliographie der Flechten und flechtenbewohnenden Pilze der Türkei II. Zuwachs und Lücken in der Kenntnis über die Biota der Flechten und flechtenbewohenden Pilze der Türkei in den letzten 4 Jahren, inklusive einiger Nachträöge, werden dokumentiert. Seit den Zusammenstellungen von JOHN & TÜRK (2017) und JOHN et al. (2020) wurden 32 Flechtenarten und 17 lichenikole Pilze neu für die Türkei publiziert. Insgesamt 689 weitere Arten sind neu für eine oder mehrere Provinzen. Lecanora albula, Placynthium flabellosum, Ramalina bourgaeana, R. elegans und R. tortuosa werden hier erstmals für die Türkei und 132 Arten (2 Flechtenparasiten und 132 Flechten) neu für Provinzen angegeben. 31 Publikationen wurden ausgewertet. In 40 Provinzen hat sich der Wissenstand verbessert.

1. Introduction

In many countries it is common practice to provide information on the improvement of knowledge about the lichen biota at more or less regular intervals, e. g. Austria (HAFELLNER & TÜRK 2001, 2016), France (ROUX 2012, ROUX et al. 2014, 2017), Germany (GRUMMANN 1963, WIRTH 1994, SCHOLZ 2000, PRINTZEN et al. 2022), Great Britain (CROMBIE 1894, SMITH 1926, PURVIS et al. 1992, COPPINS 2002, SMITH et al. 2009) and Italy (NIMIS 1993, 2016, NIMIS & MARTELLOS 2003). Some of the lists have appeared at short intervals. On the one hand, this documents the dynamics with which the lichen flora changes, and on the other hand, the intensity of the processing by specialists. The current list of the lichens of Turkey is nevertheless still too young (JOHN & TÜRK 2017), so that actually only additions are planned (JOHN et al. 2020) and the present list.

In addition to the checklists of lichens of individual countries, bibliographies are occasionally published, e. g. Austria (TÜRK & POELT 1993, TÜRK & HAFELLNER 2017), Great Britain (HAWKSWORTH & SEWARD 1977). Accordingly, the present compilation is also intended to bring the data situation from this point of view up to date.

Occasionally, distribution maps of individual species are helpful for a wide variety of questions. An overview has been compiled by SCHOLZ (2007). In many countries, mainly in Europe, raster maps have become common, some at the country level, some for individual regions or political units (BERGER et al. 2009, JOHN 1990, SEWARD & HITCH 1982, TÜRK et al. 1998, WIRTH 1995). Such a representation based on equally sized grids has not yet become established in Turkey (JOHN 1992, 1996). Instead, provinces are used as the basis for country-wide differentiation of distribution in Turkey. A major disadvantage of this representation is the different size of the provinces (Yalova 798 km², Kilis 1412 km², Konya 40838 km², Sivas 28164 km²). On the other hand, such subdivisions are comparable with other states, e. g. the federal states in Germany, which process their own lists, or the French departments (ROUX et al. 2017).

2. Material and method

Recently published and overlooked papers dealing with lichens from Turkey are evaluated and presented as additions to JOHN & TÜRK (2017) and JOHN et al. (2020). The taxonomy has been adapted to a modern view (NIMIS et al. 2018, PRINTZEN et al. 2022). Author names follow BRUMMITT & POWELL (1992). Lichen names are alphabetically listed. Numbers (see Tab. 1) as well as names of the provinces are presented. All literature referring to lichens in Turkey, including those briefly citing Turkish records is included. Lichenicolous fungi (but no lichenicolous lichens) are marked by an asterisk (*).

5. Discussion

This paper summarizes records of lichenized and lichenicolous fungi published in Turkey between the years 2020-2023 and is a continuation of the study by JOHN et al. (2020) to update the checklist. It also contains original records for Turkey or for one or more provinces. In this study, Lecanora albula Nyl. (from Gümüşhane province), Placynthium flabellosum (Tuck.) Zahlbr. (from Trabzon), Ramalina bourgaeana Nyl. (from Samsun), Ramalina elegans (Bagl. & Carestia) Stizenb. (from Bolu) and Ramalina tortuosa Krog & Østh. (from Aksaray) are new records for Turkey. Additionally, a total of 134 species (2 lichenicolous and 132 lichenized) are new to one or more provinces in the original records from a total of 21 provinces. As a result, a total of 797 taxa are listed in this checklist. Of these, 48 species (13 lichenicol and 35 lichenized) are new for Turkey, and 749 taxa (56 lichenicol and 693 lichenized) are new records for one or more provinces. The nomenclature was adapted to a more modern system (PRINTZEN et al. 2022).

The number of registered species from Turkey now is 2060 (1811 lichenized and 249 lichenicolous species). In the years 2020-2023, the most comprehensive studies were carried out in Bingöl (YAZICI & ASLAN 2021, YAZICI et al. 2022), Bitlis (YAZICI et al. 2020b), Muş (YAZICI et al. 2020a), Tunceli (YAZICI & ASLAN 2021, YAZICI & ASLAN 2022) and Van (KARAGÖZ et al. 2022), all these provinces of the eastern Anatolian region of Turkey. With these recent studies, there has been a significant increase in the number of lichenized and lichenicolous fungi records (Tab. 2, Fig. 3) compared to GÜVENÇ et al. (2020) for these provinces.

Among these neighboring provinces, Bingöl and Tunceli are the provinces with the most similar lichen diversity. In the analysis made during the period when lichen diversity was not studied in detail, lichen diversity in the provinces of Bingöl and Tunceli was found to be different (GÜVENÇ et al. 2020). It is seen that the climate, topography, and vegetation of Bingöl and Tunceli provinces are similar. Lichen diversity was found to be similar in the provinces of Bitlis and Muş, which have similar climate, topography, and vegetation. Lichen diversity in Van province is different from these provinces (Fig. 5). These results clearly reveal the importance of detailed floristic lichen studies to be carried out based on provinces in Turkey from now on.

The provinces with the lowest number of registered lichen species in Turkey are Kilis (8), Karaman (11), Şırnak (11), Kırıkkale (21), Diyarbakır (32), Hakkari (33), Batman (35), Siirt (40), Amasya (49), Ağrı (57), Düzce (59), Mardin (61), Kahramanmaraş (65), Kars (65), Yalova (70) and Bartın (72). We believe that it is important to give priority to these provinces in future studies to determine the lichen flora of Turkey.

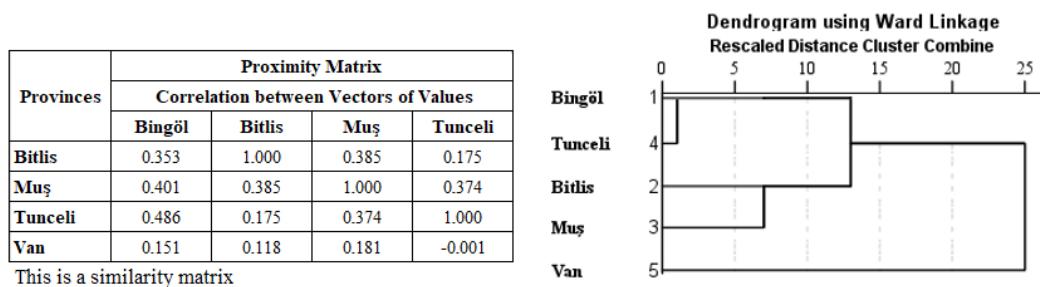

Fig. 6. Comparison of lichen diversity of Bingöl, Bitlis, Muş, Tunceli and Van provinces in Eastern Anatolia of Turkey.

Since the boom of the early 1980s, lichenology has produced just two generations of scientists who have seriously studied lichens. An unofficial association of Turkish lichenologists lasted only sixteen years from 1998 to 2013 (JOHN 2004, TÜRK 2005). In 2011, TLT (Türk Liken Topluluğu) became LIKAD (Liken Araştırmaları Derneği). Nine issues of Türk Liken Topluğu Bülteni (2005 - 2011) were followed by only two issues of Liken Araştırmaları Derneği Bülteni (2012 - 2013). Harassing requirements from politics and administration have now made proper study of lichens difficult and nearly impossible for foreign researchers even for Turkish scientists. This is clearly expressed in the recent decline of publications dealing with lichens (Fig. 6).

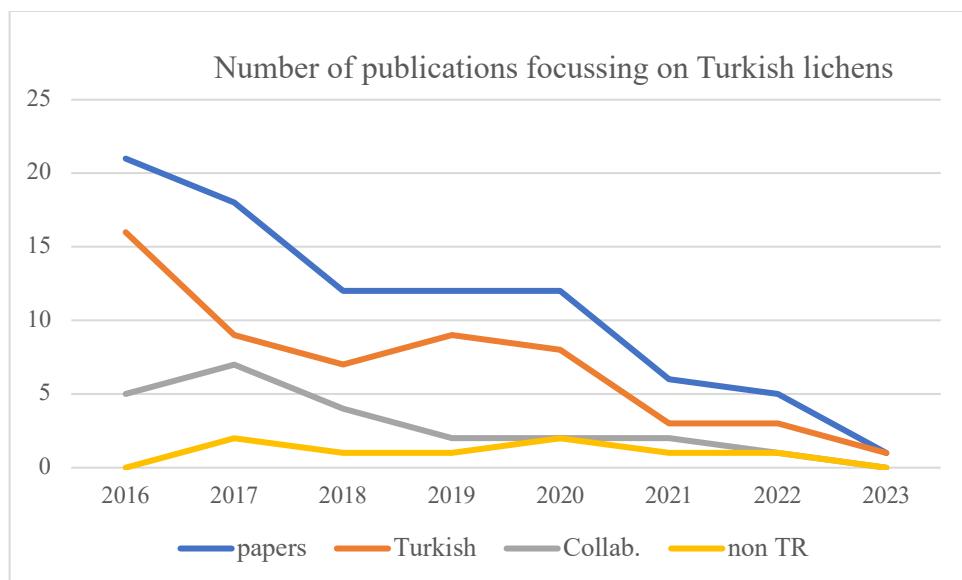

Fig. 7. Dramatic decline in the number of publications focussing on lichens in Turkey.

Against this background, it will be a long time before a satisfactory study of the Turkish lichen biota is achieved. Deficits with only between 101 and 200 species exist in 18 provinces and especially in 17 provinces with only 1 to 100 species, alltogether 43,2 % of all provinces. Figures 2 and 3 clearly visualize the deficits. It is to be hoped that soon a new upswing in lichenology in Turkey will start.
